

Mark Ferguson

Mark Ferguson is practicing architect and land planner who has specialized in land development work in Prince George's County, Maryland since his graduation from the School of Architecture at the University of Maryland at College Park in 1985. While his primary areas of practice are in planning and zoning work and in site development planning, he regularly supervises the preparation of road and drainage designs storm water management plans and the other typical associated civil engineering work connected with land development projects. In his work in the architectural field, Mr. Ferguson has designed and overseen the construction of almost two million square feet of commercial space, and has provided expert consultations to the United States Department of Justice on site-related handicapped accessibility issues at a number of sites around the United States. Mr. Ferguson was the chairman of the Hyattsville CDC's Board of Directors from its inception in 2001 until the summer of 2007.
